Two friends were walking through the desert. At one stage in their journey, they had an argument and one friend slapped the other one in the face.

The one who got slapped was hurt, but without saying anything he wrote in the sand, "Today my best friend slapped me in the face."

They kept on walking until they found an oasis, where they decided to have a wash. The one who had been slapped got stuck in a mire and started drowning, but his friend saved him. After he had recovered from his shock, he wrote on a stone, "Today my best friend saved my life."

The friend who slapped and saved his best friend asked him, "After I hurt you, you wrote in the sand and now, you write in stone, why?"

The other friend replied, "When someone hurts us we should write it down in sand where winds of forgiveness can erase it away. But, when someone does something good for us, we must engrave it in stone where no wind can ever erase it."

Moral of the story: Don't value the things you have in your life. Value those who you have in your life.

1. Communication is key

Our collegiettes agree: if you're not open and honest with your roommates, things will go downhill fast.

2. Common areas require boundaries

If you're sharing any kind of space in your living area, make sure you establish rules about cleaning and space allocation too.

3. Have a clear understanding of chores and house rules

Though it can be tough to confront because of the nature of your friendship, dividing up household chores and rules is necessary.

4. Overlapping friend groups can be good or bad

If you and your friend share a common friend group, there are plusses and minuses to that situation, too.

5. Conversations about money need to happen

Talking about bills and finances can be tense, but it's absolutely necessary to maintain a home or apartment.

6. Living habits can differ from friendship habits

Living with your friend likely was or will be a huge wakeup call for both of you. "Your friend thinks she knows you well, but you may have personal pet peeves or sleeping rituals that are important to share with her once she becomes your roommate!"
