Vocational Programme

Vocational certificates provide intensive, focused training that prepares learners for work in a specific trade. In these programs, students develop the core skills needed to perform daily, practical tasks for vocational careers. The vocational training in Thailand allows the students to do fieldwork while benefiting from an allowance to cover living expenses or free accommodation along with their studies and they are given compensation for their contributions from the company's income and profits. In other words, they work as temporary employees.

Schools directly work in partnership with the private sector companies in order to draft action plans and set goals for students that they should meet. At most of the times, the company gives a permanent job to the interns after completing their graduation and the dual program. Therefore, those students who have completed their nine years of education can enroll with a technical college where they study vocational subjects and side by side work in the companies.
