The Rabbit and the Turtle

Once upon a time, a rabbit always teased a turtle for being slow. One day, the turtle challenged the rabbit to a race. The rabbit laughed but agreed.

The next day, the race began. First, the rabbit zoomed ahead quickly. Soon after, he decided to take a nap, thinking he had plenty of time.

Meanwhile, the turtle kept moving steadily. Later, he passed the sleeping rabbit and continued toward the finish line.

Finally, the rabbit woke up and saw the turtle near the finish line. He ran fast, but it was too late. The turtle had already won.

From then on, the rabbit never teased the turtle again.

The Championship Game

Once upon a time, the Animal Village held its first ever House Building Championship. Pigs, birds, and beavers had been preparing for weeks, but the biggest buzz was around the three famous pig brothers.

When the contest started, each pig rushed to their building zone.

While the crowd was cheering, the first pig gathered a pile of straw. He had chosen it because it was light and easy to carry.

The second pig was collecting sticks from the forest. He had planned a simple but stronger design.

Meanwhile, the third pig was working slowly with bricks.

He had learned from past storms that a strong house took time. While others were laughing, he kept laying brick after brick.

At the end of the day, the animals gathered to test the houses.

A giant fan was brought in to blow on each house, just like the wild wind in the forest.

When the fan blew on the straw house, it collapsed immediately.

The stick house shook and wobbled, then broke down too.

The second pig was trying to hold it up, but the sticks flew everywhere.

Then, the fan blew on the brick house, but the house stood strong.

The third pig opened his brick door and let his brothers in.

So, the judges declared him the champion — not just for his house, but for his kindness and teamwork.
